made considerable advancement through the Hague Conferences and the Hague Court toward the organization of the world on a juristic basis. The State is treated by Dr. Hill as an Embodiment of Law, as a Juristic Person, a Promoter of General Welfare, a Member of Society, a Subject of Positive Law, a Mediator of Guarantees, an Armed Power, and a Justiciable Person. Dr. Hill, in his extended service as United States Minister and Ambassador abroad, has had wide opportunities to observe the actual relations of States in the modern world, and these he has used industriously and with fine insight not only in the preparation of this book, but also of his earlier and larger work, "A History of Diplomacy in the International Development of Europe." The work which we are here noticing deserves a careful reading by students of modern international relations, and more particularly by that class of men who believe, or think they believe, that war is inevitable and that all efforts to eliminate it from the world are foolish and wasted.

WOMAN AND LABOR. By Olive Schreiner. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. 299 pages. Price, $1.25 net.

A vigorous and powerful book by a strong, vital, courageous and sane woman. All who are interested in the position and progress of women will be profited by reading it, and those who are not interested will, if they try two or three pages, be unable to escape from the grip of her splendid thought and fine eloquence. The chapter on "Woman and War" is one of the noblest utterances on the subject that we have seen, and is worth in itself several times the price of the book.

It is the result of many years of most careful and painstaking investigation by Mr. Speer, and is written in his well known clear and captivating style.
